FY 2010 Report to Congress on the Use of Section 7623

I. Executive Summary

The Tax Relief and Health Care Act of 2006 (the Act) enacted significant changes in the IRS award program for whistleblowers. For information provided to the IRS after December 19, 2006, new section 7623(b) of the Internal Revenue Code (the Code) generally requires the IRS to pay awards if information an individual provides substantially contributes to the collection of tax, penalties, interest, and other amounts when the amounts in dispute are more than $2 million. The law set award ranges based on percentages of the collected proceeds, and established a Whistleblower Office within the IRS to administer those awards.

The Secretary of the Treasury must conduct an annual study and report to the Congress on the use of section 7623 and the results obtained, and include any legislative or administrative recommendations for section 7623 and its application (section 406(c) of the Act). This report discusses program activities for fiscal year (FY) 2010. It includes a review of the law and regulations applicable to whistleblower awards, changes made in program administration since the Act, a description of internal and external program guidance, administrative priorities, and data on awards paid. The IRS pays awards from collected proceeds after the completion of an audit or investigation and after the taxpayer has exhausted all appeal rights. Therefore, the IRS may not make payments for several years after the whistleblower has filed the claim. All award payments made during FY 2010 resulted from claims filed under the prior law.

The primary purpose of the Act was to encourage people with knowledge of significant tax noncompliance to provide that information to the IRS. In FY 2010, the IRS received 431 submissions that appear to meet the section 7623(b) criteria, identifying 5,429 taxpayers. Many of the individuals submitting this information claim to have inside knowledge of the transactions they are reporting, and often provide extensive documentation to support their claims. The IRS cannot yet tell how many of the cases will result in collected proceeds, and whether the whistleblowers' estimates of the amounts in dispute are accurate.

This report describes the legal framework that forms the basis for developing program guidance that the IRS issued in FY 2010, most notably the revisions to the Internal Revenue Manual (IRM) issued on June 18, 2010.<sup>1</sup> On January 18, 2011, the IRS published a proposed change to the applicable Treasury Regulation, seeking public comment on the definition of "collected proceeds" that the IRS will use in determining award amounts. Internal program guidance, including the IRM, will be revised to reflect the final regulation after it is issued. The IRS expects the final regulation to be issued in FY 2011. The discussion of the legal framework also explains the basis for disclosures of taxpayer information that will occur in administrative proceedings to make award determinations.

II. Program History

A. Prior Law and Policy

The IRS has had the authority to pay awards to whistleblowers for many years. What is now section 7623(a)<sup>2</sup> of the Code has its origins in legislation the Congress enacted in 1867. The original law provided the Secretary with the authority “to pay such sums as he deems necessary for detecting and bringing to trial and punishment persons guilty of violating the internal revenue laws or conniving at the same.” Before 1996, the IRS made payments from appropriated funds. In 1996, section 1209 of the Taxpayer Bill of Rights 2 (PL 104-168) expanded the purposes for which the IRS may pay awards, adding “detecting underpayments of tax” as a basis for making an award and changed the source of funds from IRS operating funds to proceeds of amounts collected from the taxpayer (other than interest).<sup>3</sup>

Before the 2006 amendments to section 7623, awards to whistleblowers were discretionary, and IRS policy determined the amount.<sup>4</sup> The policy provided a framework for assessing the contribution of the information to the collection of proceeds from a taxpayer, and allowed for awards of 1 percent, 10 percent, or 15 percent of proceeds. The published policy set a cap on awards at $10,000,000, but the IRS waived this cap from time to time under “special agreements” with a whistleblower.

The Internal Revenue Manual (IRM) provided several grounds for rejecting a claim for award, including participation in the evasion scheme that was the subject of the report the whistleblower provided. Other common reasons for rejecting claims included:

- The information provided was of no value.
- The IRS already had the information or the information was available in public records.
- No collection of taxes and penalties existed from which the IRS could pay an award.

The information might be of no value because it did not provide a sufficient basis for initiating an examination or investigation of the issue presented, or because the examination resulted in a “no change” finding.

<sup>2</sup> The 2006 amendments re-designated the prior section 7623 as section 7623(a), added new provisions as section 7623(b), and included program administration requirements that were not incorporated into the Internal Revenue Code. The appendix to this report reprints section 7623, as amended, as well as additional provisions in the Act that the Congress did not incorporate into the Code.

<sup>3</sup> The IRS has separate authority to pay informant expenses from appropriated funds available for confidential criminal investigation expenditures. The IRS makes those payments under authorities delegated to Criminal Investigation and they are not within the scope of the Whistleblower Office or this report to the Congress.

<sup>4</sup> Regulations implementing what is now section 7623(a) appear at Code of Federal Regulations Title 26, section 301.7623-1. The last version of the policy issued prior to the 2006 amendments was published in 2004, as Policy Statement P-4-27. The policy was revised in FY 2010, through revisions of the Internal Revenue Manual discussed below.

B. 2006 Amendments

The Tax Relief and Health Care Act of 2006 (section 406) (PL 109-432) created section 7623(b) of the Code. This section set a new framework for the consideration of whistleblower submissions and established the Whistleblower Office within the IRS to administer that framework. Operating at the direction of the Commissioner of the IRS, the Whistleblower Office coordinates with other divisions of the IRS, analyzes information submitted, and makes award determinations. The statute provides that the Whistleblower Office may investigate the claim itself or assign it to the appropriate IRS office for investigation. The Whistleblower Office does not currently investigate claims itself. Individuals may appeal Whistleblower Office determinations to the U.S. Tax Court.

A whistleblower must meet several conditions to qualify for the section 7623(b) award program.<sup>5</sup> To qualify for a whistleblower award, the information must:

- Relate to a tax noncompliance matter in which the tax, penalties, interest, additions to tax, and additional amounts in dispute exceed $2,000,000; and
- Relate to a taxpayer, and for individual taxpayers only, one whose gross income exceeds $200,000 for at least one of the tax years in question.

If the information meets the above conditions and substantially contributes to a decision to take administrative or judicial action that results in the collection of tax, penalties, interest, additions to tax, or additional amounts, the IRS will pay an award of at least 15 percent, but not more than 30 percent, of the collected proceeds resulting from administrative or judicial actions (including related actions), or from any settlement in response to an administrative or judicial action. The maximum award percentage decreases to 10 percent for cases based principally on specific allegations disclosed in certain public information sources (such as government audit reports). The Whistleblower Office also can reduce the percentage if the whistleblower planned and initiated the actions that led to the underpayment of tax.

C. Implementing the 2006 Amendments

On December 19, 2007, Notice 2008-4, 2008-2 Internal Revenue Bulletin 253,<sup>6</sup> provided initial guidance on how to submit whistleblower information to the IRS. The IRS continues to develop and revise operating procedures to ensure the proper review of each submission. Individuals may appeal award determinations made under section 7623(b) to the Tax Court. Procedures established to evaluate whistleblower submissions make a clear distinction between determinations regarding awards, made by the Whistleblower Office (such as eligibility for an award or the amount of an award), and tax administration decisions, made by IRS operating divisions (such as the scope of an examination or investigation, or the assessment of taxes, penalties, and interest). The whistleblower has no role in tax administration decisions, and may not appeal or otherwise challenge an IRS tax administration decision.

On June 18, 2010, the IRS revised the IRM to provide detailed guidance under section 7623, including disclosures to whistleblowers prior to award determinations under <sup>5</sup> If the submission does not meet the criteria for section 7623(b) consideration, the IRS may consider it for an award under the pre-Act discretionary authority (what is now section 7623(a) of the Code).

section 7623(b). This guidance is described further in the Program Developments section, below.

III. Program Developments

A. Staffing

At the beginning of FY 2010, the Whistleblower Office staff of 17 included ten analysts with decades of experience in a broad array of IRS compliance programs. After reviewing case intake levels and expected workload as the first award determinations were made under section 7623(b), the IRS authorized a staff increase to 21 in August 2010. Recruiting for the additional staff was in progress as of the end of FY 2010.

B. Case Management Information System

The IRS began to receive whistleblower submissions alleging more than $2 million in underpayment of tax almost immediately after enactment of the amendments to section 7623. The IRS initially evaluated the submissions using processes and systems designed for the pre-amendment informant awards program. The IRS recognized that the case management information system designed for the pre-amendment program would not be adequate to manage the case load under the new law. Therefore, the IRS supplemented it with other automated and manual case management tools as a stop-gap until it could design and implement a new case management system.

In January 2009, the IRS began using a new case management system based on commercial-off-the-shelf technology to record all new section 7623 claims. By the end of FY 2009, the IRS converted all section 7623(b) claims recorded on the old systems to the new system, and began planning to convert legacy data to the new system. The legacy data on pre-amendment claims and section 7623(a) claims submitted prior to January 2009 was loaded into the new system in July 2010, and records on all open legacy cases were updated to incorporate the enhanced features of the new system.<sup>7</sup> The new case management system captures all of the data needed to manage section 7623 claims, from receipt to analysis and assignment to an operating division, as well as the award determination process when operating division actions result in collected proceeds. Staff in each operating division and Criminal Investigation have access to data on cases assigned to their organization or component, and may update records to reflect actions they take during the evaluation of information submitted by whistleblowers.

<sup>7</sup> Legacy data on closed cases is available for research and reference in the new system, but was not updated.

C. Program Guidance

The IRS issued Notice 2008-4 on December 19, 2007 to provide initial guidance on how to submit information to the IRS. A revision to Form 211, Application for Award for Original Information,<sup>8</sup> accompanied this notice. The notice addressed the most pressing guidance requirements—how to submit information and the criteria that the IRS will apply to determine whether the information qualifies under section 7623(b). The notice included the requirement that an individual submit the information under penalty of perjury and defines ineligible submissions. A submission may be ineligible because the person submitting it is disqualified (e.g., a federal employee who learned of the tax noncompliance in the course of performing his or her duties), or because the information does not provide a basis for IRS action. The latter category includes information that is speculative or that the IRS already knows. The notice also described the types of information that the whistleblower should include for the IRS to be able to evaluate the submission.

The IRS published revisions to the IRM on June 16, 2010. Those revisions update procedures for receipt and processing of whistleblower submissions, and provide the framework for making award determinations. Key sections of revised IRM 25.2.2 address:

- Procedures for case intake and case information management
- Guidelines for evaluating whistleblower submissions, including a checklist for debriefing the whistleblower and rules to follow when legal issues may preclude the use of information provided by a whistleblower
- Information required by the Whistleblower Office when the Operating Division or Criminal Investigation completes action on a submission, including required supporting documents
- Criteria for evaluating the whistleblower's contribution to IRS actions, including definitions of key terms such as "related actions" and "collected proceeds,"<sup>9</sup> as well as criteria for setting the award percentage within the ranges provided by law
- Administrative procedures for determining the award amount, which include an opportunity for the whistleblower to comment on section 7623(b) award determinations before a final decision is made

<sup>9</sup> After the IRM was published, the IRS re-examined the definition of "collected proceeds" and concluded that the language in the IRM was more restrictive than is legally required. A change to Treas. Reg. § 301.7623-1 to reflect a broader definition of collected proceeds was issued for public comment on January 18, 2011.

- Procedures for processing the award payment through the IRS accounting functions

An important policy change reflected in the IRM was that awards paid in section 7623(a) cases submitted on or after July 1, 2010 (those in which the statutory thresholds for 7623(b) claims are not met) will be determined using the same criteria and percentages that apply to 7623(b) claims. Section 7623(a) claims submitted prior to July 1, 2010, will be evaluated under the rules and policy in effect at the time the claim was filed.

Disclosure of Taxpayer Information

A whistleblower can appeal any determination regarding an award under section 7623(b)(1), (b)(2), or (b)(3) to the Tax Court pursuant to section 7623(b)(4). A meaningful right to appeal to the Tax Court requires disclosure to the whistleblower of the basis for the award determination. The IRS Chief Counsel has advised that section 6103(h)(4), which permits disclosures in certain administrative and judicial proceedings, authorizes this disclosure. That disclosure authority provides a new level of transparency in award determinations. However, it is important to note that the award determination focuses on the extent to which the whistleblower's information contributed to assessments and collection of taxes, penalties, interest, and other amounts, which may require disclosure to the whistleblower of significant taxpayer information.<sup>10</sup>

The core findings that the IRS must make in an award determination focus on the extent to which the IRS took action based on the information the whistleblower provided, and the degree to which the whistleblower's information substantially contributed to that action. Analysis may include a review of the examination plan to determine whether the IRS adjusted the scope of the examination, review of information document requests to determine whether the IRS modified them based on the issues the whistleblower identified, or review of information from the taxpayer or a third party that may have corroborated or refuted the whistleblower's submission.

The IRS may include in the file information about the return as originally filed by the taxpayer and any adjustments made based on information provided by the whistleblower. The IRS will also include information on consideration of penalties, abatement requests, reasonable cause defenses, and collection issues. All of this information in the award recommendation file is part of the administrative record supporting the award determination, and will be available to a whistleblower challenging the determination in the Tax Court.

Because of the volume and sensitivity of the information in an awards file, the IRS has designed an award determination administrative proceeding to protect taxpayer privacy while affording the whistleblower a meaningful opportunity to participate in the process. The initial communication to the whistleblower will identify the proceeds collected based on the whistleblower's information, the recommended award percentage, and the recommended award amount. It will also describe, in general terms, the factors contributing to the recommended award percentage. The IRS will give the whistleblower the option of accepting the recommendation, providing comments based on the

<sup>10</sup> This administrative procedure, including disclosure of taxpayer information, is set forth in IRM 25.2.2, as revised on June 16, 2010. This procedure does not apply to award determinations in 7623(a) cases, which are not subject to appeal to the U.S. Tax Court.

summary, or reviewing the detailed recommendation and the award recommendation file before submitting comments. Before the whistleblower can review the detailed recommendation and the award recommendation file, he or she must sign an agreement to use the taxpayer information only in connection with the award determination proceeding. Disclosure of the taxpayer's information or use for any other purpose could reduce the recommended award percentage.

D. Program Operations

As noted above, in December 2007, the IRS directed that all section 7623 submissions go first to the Whistleblower Office. The Whistleblower Office reviews the information to identify matters that appear to meet the section 7623(b) criteria, and forwards those that do not to the Informant Claims Examination unit for further action. That unit evaluates all submissions it receives to determine whether the information offered may materially contribute to the assessment or collection of unpaid taxes, penalties, interest, or other amounts.

During FY 2010, the IRS received 431 whistleblower submissions relating to 5,429 taxpayers<sup>11</sup> that appeared to meet the $2 million of tax, penalties, interest, and additions to tax threshold in section 7623(b). Many of the individuals submitting information to the IRS claimed to have inside knowledge of the reported transactions, often with extensive documentation to support their claims. It is not yet known how many of these cases will result in collected proceeds after examination or investigation, as the amounts alleged reflect only the whistleblower's estimate of the potential recovery. Only 9 of 97 full paid claims in FY 2010 involved collections of more than $2 million. However, because whistleblowers submitted all of the claims paid in 2010 under the old Informant Award Program, this data does not assist in making estimates about the claims brought under the revised statute.

7623(b) SUBMISSIONS BY FISCAL YEAR<sup>12</sup>

	Submissions	Taxpayers Identified
2007	49	587
2008	378	1366
2009	470	2150
2010	431	5429

<sup>11</sup> The Whistleblower Office often receives submissions that allege underpayment of tax by more than one taxpayer. In most cases, the IRS must evaluate the liability of each taxpayer individually—a single audit or investigation cannot resolve the issues for all taxpayers identified in the submission.

<sup>12</sup> Statistics on 7623(b) submissions and taxpayers identified are based on the best information available at the time the report is produced. The classification of a particular submission as a potential 7623(b) case, and the number of taxpayers identified, can change as additional information is developed. As a result, the numbers for a particular fiscal year included in previous annual reports do not match the numbers reported here.

E. Outreach and Communications

The IRS has developed a communications plan to address outreach to both the public and IRS personnel on changes in the whistleblower program. The plan includes efforts to identify opportunities for improvement and potential barriers to change, and to manage expectations for the scope and pace of change.

The Whistleblower Office has a page on the IRS Intranet to make information available to IRS personnel, and provides articles for internal newsletters and speakers for professional education events to reach employees who are most likely to deal with a whistleblower case. In June 2010, the Whistleblower Office hosted a meeting of managers and employees from the Operating Divisions and the offices of Criminal Investigation and Chief Counsel. This provided a forum to discuss the new guidance published in the IRM, and to share experiences in an effort to further improve program administration.

A dedicated page on the public website, www.irs.gov, contains information for the public about the purpose of the Whistleblower Program, how to make a submission, and what to expect after making a submission, as well as links to Notice 2008-4 and Form 211.<sup>13</sup> The Whistleblower Office also makes presentations to professional groups involved in the representation of taxpayers and whistleblowers, both to describe program developments and to obtain outside perspectives on the program.

IV. Administrative Priorities and Issues

The Whistleblower Office continues to work with the IRS Office of Chief Counsel and Treasury Department to develop appropriate administrative program guidance. Based on the Whistleblower Office's experiences in administering the whistleblower program since its formation in 2007, the IRS has identified several areas it believes should be addressed through administrative guidance and as well as other issues.

A. Administrative Priorities

1. Guidance

A top priority is to update formal published guidance for section 7623. As described below, this includes issuing final regulations to define collected proceeds and drafting proposed regulations that would update the current regulations to reflect the statutory changes made by the 2006 amendments to section 7623. The IRS recently finalized the temporary and proposed regulations issued in March 2008 under section 6103(n).

- a. Issue final regulations to define collected proceeds. On January 18, 2011, the IRS issued proposed regulations seeking public comment on a proposal to define the term "collected proceeds" for both section 7623(a) and (b). As proposed, this regulation clarifies the definitions of "proceeds of amounts collected” and “collected proceeds” for purposes of section 7623, and states that the provisions of Treas. Reg. §301.7623-1(a) concerning refund prevention claims are applicable to claims under section 7623(a) and (b). In clarifying the definitions of proceeds of amounts collected and collected proceeds, this proposed regulation also provides that the reduction of an overpayment credit balance is also considered proceeds of amounts collected and collected proceeds under section 7623. The IRS expects to issue final regulations defining collected proceeds for purposes of section 7623 after receiving public comments on the proposed regulations.

b. Issue proposed regulations updating section 7623 regulations to reflect 2006 Amendments. The IRS Office of Chief Counsel, working with the Assistant Secretary for Tax Policy, the Whistleblower Office, and other IRS offices, is drafting comprehensive proposed regulations that will revise the current regulations implementing section 7623 to reflect the 2006 amendments to the statute.

c. Final section 6103(n) regulations. Treasury and the IRS recently finalized temporary regulations issued under section 6103(n) in March 2008 which authorize contracts for services with whistleblowers to be used in unusual circumstances when direct assistance of a whistleblower is sought by the Service, and the parameters for disclosure of return information in connection with such contracts. These regulations were set to expire in March 2011.

2. Other Priorities

a. Review and update internal operating procedures to improve program performance. The IRS plans to conduct a comprehensive review of whistleblower program internal operating procedures to identify opportunities for improved performance. This will include collecting information from Operating Division and Chief Counsel staff who evaluate whistleblower information in order to identify opportunities to more efficiently and effectively evaluate and process whistleblower claims.

b. Begin paying awards for claims made under section 7623(b). In FY 2011, the IRS will begin paying awards for claims made under section 7623(b). In June 2010, the IRS published procedures and criteria for making award determinations under the 2006 Amendments, including providing an opportunity for whistleblowers in section 7623(b) cases to provide comments on award recommendations before a final award determination is made. The Whistleblower Office expects to apply these procedures and criteria to the initial section 7623(b) cases in which proceeds have been collected, and begin making award determinations in these cases in the second quarter of FY 2011.

B. Other Issues of Interest

A number of additional issues exist in the administration of the Whistleblower Program.

- 1. The definition of “collected proceeds” does not extend to all recoveries from taxpayers. Potential taxpayer liabilities are sometimes resolved in a manner that does not result in collected proceeds from which an award may be paid. This can occur when the taxpayer has a net loss carried forward from a prior period or carried back from a subsequent period. In addition, if a taxpayer is prosecuted for a criminal violation of the internal revenue laws, a sentence after conviction may include fines. Criminal fines are not available to pay awards under section 7623, because the Victims of Crime Act (42 U.S.C. section 10601 et seq.) requires that all criminal fines be deposited in the Victims of Crime Fund.
- 2. The dollar amount thresholds for “gross income” and “amounts in dispute” are undefined. Section 7623(b)(5) sets two thresholds for application of section 7623(b), which also serve to define the jurisdiction of the U.S. Tax Court to review whistleblower award determinations. The general rule applicable to all claims requires that “the tax, penalties, interest, additions to tax, and additional amounts in dispute exceed $2,000,000.” The law also provides that subsection (b) shall apply “in the case of any individual [taxpayer], only if such individual’s gross income exceeds $200,000 for any tax year....” Because neither term is defined in the statute, there is uncertainty in both the administration of the whistleblower program and in determining whether the U.S. Tax Court has jurisdiction to consider an appeal.

The “individual’s gross income” limitation was apparently included in the law to ensure that the focus of the award program under section 7623(b) is on relatively high income taxpayers. In the absence of a definition, the IRS must look to other provisions of the Internal Revenue Code to determine how to calculate “gross income.” This may require complex calculations in cases where allocation of partnership income or other similar issues apply. The IRS questions whether this effort is intended or justified, given that failure to satisfy the gross income threshold generally shifts the claim from a mandatory section 7623(b) claim to a discretionary section 7623(a) claim. Approximately 85 percent of submissions do not appear to meet the income or amount in dispute thresholds but will be considered for awards under section 7623(a) if the IRS acts on them and collects proceeds. To the extent that the individual income threshold was intended to provide a limit on U.S. Tax Court jurisdiction, the practical impact appears to be limited. Few cases involving individual taxpayers will exceed the $2 million threshold but not have at least one taxpayer whose income exceeds $200,000 or at least one taxpayer that is not an individual.

Similar concerns pertain to the $2 million “amount in dispute” threshold. Section 7623(b)(5)(B) requires that “the tax, penalties, interest, additions to tax, and additional amounts in dispute” must exceed $2 million. The term “in dispute” is not defined in the law, the legislative history, or elsewhere in the Internal Revenue Code, nor does the law or legislative history indicate the point at which the amount is determined. An allegation by a whistleblower does not create a dispute between the IRS and a taxpayer, nor does the amount asserted by the whistleblower to be owed by a taxpayer satisfy the statutory threshold. The IRS working definition assumes that the dispute in question must be between the IRS and one or more taxpayers (or persons who may be required to pay penalties or “other amounts”). In cases where action is taken against multiple taxpayers as a result of information provided by a whistleblower, the IRS working definition aggregates the disputed amounts of multiple taxpayers to determine whether the $2 million threshold has been exceeded.

The IRS, Tax Court, and whistleblowers would have greater certainty about the application of section 7623(b) if the “gross income” and “amount in dispute” thresholds were replaced by a reference to a threshold that can be reasonably ascertained, such as the amount of collected proceeds.

- 3. Rules on access to and disclosure of taxpayer information do not fully protect taxpayers. A whistleblower can appeal any determination on an award under section 7623(b)(1), (2), or (3) of the Code to the Tax Court (section 7623(b)(4) of the Code). A meaningful right to appeal to Tax Court requires disclosure to the whistleblower of the basis for the award determination, which oftentimes will include taxpayer information that is protected from disclosure under section 6103. Consistent with section 6103(h), the IRM provides for disclosure of taxpayer information by the IRS to the whistleblower if the whistleblower enters into a confidentiality agreement and agrees not to disclose the information other than as permitted in that agreement.

The IRS has two concerns regarding the disclosure of taxpayer information to the whistleblower as part of an award determination. First, current law does not provide an effective sanction if the whistleblower discloses taxpayer information in violation of the confidentiality agreement and section 6103(h). Second, the whistleblower may, against the wishes of the taxpayer, disclose the identity of the taxpayer in a Tax Court or other judicial proceeding. The taxpayer is not a party to any dispute between the IRS and a whistleblower over eligibility for or the amount of an award under section 7623, but both pleadings and court decisions in these cases routinely include details about the taxpayer.<sup>14</sup>

- 4. The Whistleblower Office has limited information about the extent of the whistleblower’s contribution in some criminal cases. In some criminal cases, information available to the Whistleblower Office on the extent of the whistleblower’s contribution may be limited by grand jury secrecy rules. The Whistleblower Office may not review and consider grand jury information protected from disclosure under the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure unless an exception to the secrecy rules is granted on a case-by-case basis. Without that information, it may not be possible for the Whistleblower Office to independently assess the extent of the whistleblower’s contribution when making a determination regarding an award under section 7623.

<sup>14</sup> The IRS Office of Chief Counsel has initiated a process to bring the IRS’s concerns about the taxpayer information disclosure issue to the attention of the Tax Court.

- 5. The law does not provide for whistleblower protection. Unlike other laws that encourage whistleblowers to report information to the government, section 7623 does not prohibit retaliation against the whistleblower. When the whistleblower is an employee of the taxpayer, retaliation can take the form of a job-related action. In other cases, whistleblowers may face threats of physical harm or damage to economic interests. In such cases, whistleblowers reporting information under section 7623 may have recourse under state law, but federal law does not appear to provide a remedy.

The IRS has, as a matter of policy and as an application of section 6103, committed to protect a whistleblower's identity, and even the fact that the agency received whistleblower information in a particular case. This commitment is qualified, however, as the IRS tells whistleblowers it may identify them if they are an essential witness in a judicial proceeding or if ordered to do so by a court of competent jurisdiction. Despite the IRS's commitment to protect whistleblower identities, recent litigation has highlighted a tension between the IRS's commitment to whistleblowers and its obligations in civil discovery. Certain litigants have sought information on informant involvement in tax matters in cases where the prospect that an informant could be a witness at trial did not exist. The appropriate response to such a request should be to neither confirm nor deny informant involvement, because a truthful denial in some cases will allow individuals to draw a conclusion in other cases. The authority to take this approach is somewhat uncertain, however, and an adverse ruling on a discovery request could open the door to fishing expeditions to identify whistleblower involvement and targeted requests to determine whether particular individuals made whistleblower submissions.

V. Whistleblower Awards Paid

The table below provides information on informant claims paid. The IRS cannot make an award determination until the underlying taxpayer matter is completed, including any administrative or judicial appeals the taxpayer may choose to pursue. Whistleblowers are advised that this process may take five to seven years, and longer when there are protracted appeals or collection actions. Through FY 2010, all awards the IRS paid have been based on information received before December 20, 2006, the date of the enactment of section 406 of the Act. Therefore, the IRS paid all of the awards, including those paid in 2010, based on the prior law, what is now section 7623(a). Thus, the applicable award percentages were those established in prior IRS policy, not the higher percentages set by the 2006 law.

The number and amount of awards paid each year can vary significantly, especially when a small number of high-dollar claims are resolved in one year (as was the case in 2006 and 2008). One factor contributing to the lower award payments in FY 2009 was a change in the IRS definition of the point at which proceeds in a tax case are available to make an award payment. In the past, the IRS monitored the tax case to ensure that it collected proceeds before processing the award claim. Where the taxpayer filed an administrative or judicial appeal, the IRS did not pay claims until the court finally resolved the appeal. After consultation with the Office of Chief Counsel, the IRS determined that it should not pay claims even when the taxpayer has not filed an appeal until the period for filing an appeal has lapsed. The general rule is that a taxpayer may file a claim for refund within two years of the last payment, unless he or she has waived that right. Thus, beginning in July 2009, the IRS monitors cases for both collection and the lapse of the period for filing a claim for refund. As a result, the IRS did not pay some claims that it would have otherwise paid in FY 2009 until FY 2010 or FY 2011.

<sup>15</sup> The implementation of a new case management information system included changes in the way the IRS recorded submissions under 7623(a). The IRS cannot determine the extent to which this change was a factor in the higher number of cases received after the new system was implemented in FY 2009.

A. Revised 26 USC Section 7323

TITLE 26 - INTERNAL REVENUE CODE

Subtitle F - Procedure and Administration

CHAPTER 78 - DISCOVERY OF LIABILITY AND ENFORCEMENT OF TITLE

Subchapter B - General Powers and Duties

Sec. 7623. Expenses of detection of underpayments and fraud, etc.

(a) In General- The Secretary, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, is authorized to pay such sums as he deems necessary for -

(1) detecting underpayments of tax, or

(2) detecting and bringing to trial and punishment persons guilty of violating the internal revenue laws or conniving at the same, in cases where such expenses are not otherwise provided for by law. Any amount payable under the preceding sentence shall be paid from the proceeds of amounts collected by reason of the information provided, and any amount so collected shall be available for such payments.

(b) Awards to Whistleblowers-

(1) IN GENERAL- If the Secretary proceeds with any administrative or judicial action described in subsection (a) based on information brought to the Secretary's attention by an individual, such individual shall, subject to paragraph (2), receive as an award at least 15 percent but not more than 30 percent of the collected proceeds (including penalties, interest, additions to tax, and additional amounts) resulting from the action (including any related actions) or from any settlement in response to such action. The determination of the amount of such award by the Whistleblower Office shall depend upon the extent to which the individual substantially contributed to such action.

(2) AWARD IN CASE OF LESS SUBSTANTIAL CONTRIBUTION-

(A) IN GENERAL- In the event the action described in paragraph (1) is one which the Whistleblower Office determines to be based principally on disclosures of specific allegations (other than information provided by the individual described in paragraph (1)) resulting from a judicial or administrative hearing, from a governmental report, hearing, audit, or investigation, or from the news media, the Whistleblower Office may award such sums as it considers appropriate, but in no case more than 10 percent of the collected proceeds (including penalties, interest, additions to tax, and additional amounts) resulting from the action (including any related actions) or from any settlement in response to such action, taking into account the significance of the individual's information and the role of such individual and any legal representative of such individual in contributing to such action.

(B) NONAPPLICATION OF PARAGRAPH WHERE INDIVIDUAL IS ORIGINAL SOURCE OF INFORMATION- Subparagraph (A) shall not apply if the information resulting in the initiation of the action described in paragraph (1) was originally provided by the individual described in paragraph (1).

(3) REDUCTION IN OR DENIAL OF AWARD- If the Whistleblower Office determines that the claim for an award under paragraph (1) or (2) is brought by an individual who planned and initiated the actions that led to the underpayment of tax or actions described in subsection (a)(2), then the Whistleblower Office may appropriately reduce such award. If such individual is convicted of criminal conduct arising from the role described in the preceding sentence, the Whistleblower Office shall deny any award.

(4) APPEAL OF AWARD DETERMINATION- Any determination regarding an award under paragraph (1), (2), or (3) may, within 30 days of such determination, be appealed to the Tax Court (and the Tax Court shall have jurisdiction with respect to such matter).

(5) APPLICATION OF THIS SUBSECTION- This subsection shall apply with respect to any action--

(A) against any taxpayer, but in the case of any individual, only if such individual's gross income exceeds $200,000 for any taxable year subject to such action, and

(B) if the tax, penalties, interest, additions to tax, and additional amounts in dispute exceed $2,000,000.

(6) ADDITIONAL RULES-

(A) NO CONTRACT NECESSARY- No contract with the Internal Revenue Service is necessary for any individual to receive an award under this subsection.

(B) REPRESENTATION- Any individual described in paragraph (1) or (2) may be represented by counsel.

(C) SUBMISSION OF INFORMATION- No award may be made under this subsection based on information submitted to the Secretary unless such information is submitted under penalty of perjury.'

B. Other provisions of Section 406 of the Tax Relief and Health Care Act of 2006

(a)(2) ASSIGNMENT TO SPECIAL TRIAL JUDGES-

(A) IN GENERAL- Section 7443A(b) (relating to proceedings which may be assigned to special trial judges) is amended by striking 'and' at the end of paragraph (5), by redesignating paragraph (6) as paragraph (7), and by inserting after paragraph (5) the following new paragraph:

(6) any proceeding under section 7623(b)(4), and'.

(B) CONFORMING AMENDMENT- Section 7443A(c) is amended by striking 'or (5)' and inserting '(5), or (6)'

(3) DEDUCTION ALLOWED WHETHER OR NOT TAXPAYER ITEMIZES- Subsection (a) of section 62 (relating to general rule defining adjusted gross income) is amended by inserting after paragraph (20) the following new paragraph:

(21) ATTORNEYS FEES RELATING TO AWARDS TO WHISTLEBLOWERS- Any deduction allowable under this chapter for attorney fees and court costs paid by, or on behalf of, the taxpayer in connection with any award under section 7623(b) (relating to awards to whistleblowers). The preceding sentence shall not apply to any deduction in excess of the amount includible in the taxpayer's gross income for the taxable year on account of such award.'

(b) Whistleblower Office-

(1) IN GENERAL- Not later than the date which is 12 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of the Treasury shall issue guidance for the operation of a whistleblower program to be administered in the Internal Revenue Service by an office to be known as the 'Whistleblower Office' which--

(A) shall at all times operate at the direction of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and coordinate and consult with other divisions in the Internal Revenue Service as directed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue,

(B) shall analyze information received from any individual described in section 7623(b) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 and either investigate the matter itself or assign it to the appropriate Internal Revenue Service office, and

(C) in its sole discretion, may ask for additional assistance from such individual or any legal representative of such individual.

(2) REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE- The guidance issued under paragraph (1) shall specify that any assistance requested under paragraph (1)(C) shall be under the direction and control of the Whistleblower Office or the office assigned to investigate the matter under paragraph (1)(A). No individual or legal representative whose assistance is so requested may by reason of such request represent himself or herself as an employee of the Federal Government.

(c) Report by Secretary- The Secretary of the Treasury shall each year conduct a study and report to Congress on the use of section 7623 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, including--

(1) an analysis of the use of such section during the preceding year and the results of such use, and

(2) any legislative or administrative recommendations regarding the provisions of such section and its application.

(d) Effective Date- The amendments made by subsection (a) shall apply to information provided on or after the date of the enactment of this Act.
